To Whom It May Concern:

This is to verify that Kevin R. Cassell was a member of the English faculty of University College, the part-time evening division of Northeastern University from September, 1997 to June, 2001. From the start he distinguished himself as an excellent instructor and departmental citizen. Our records show that he was assigned to teach Advanced English for International Students, Critical Writing 1 and 2, and Critical Writing Workshop.

In these courses he generated much praise from his students, as the following excerpts taken from their course evaluations illustrate.

“Mr. Cassell is a very intelligent and energetic teacher. He made the class very interesting even when attention could be lost. He has a very distinct style of teaching. He remained open-minded at all times allowing for the individual’s expression.”

“Kevin teaches with vibrance. It is visible that he enjoys teaching. He explains in detail and doesn’t continue unless everyone understands what was just taught. He uses great analogies when explaining his point and takes his teaching seriously.”

“The teacher kept the classroom upbeat and interesting and gave clear, constructive criticism when needed which was very helpful throughout the quarter.”

“Mr. Cassell taught an enjoyable class. His teaching techniques were effective for me. He was easy to understand and had a great way to help you understand things.”

I have found working with Mr. Cassell a pleasure and feel that he will be an asset to any institution he joins.

Sincerely,

Rose A. Doherty
